Training Philosophy:

I have always had an interest in fitness and movement sciences, especially running where I have competed at all distances including half and full marathon. However, when I broke my leg and ankle in a skiing accident, I was unable to run for many months. That is when I turned to Pilates as my main form of exercise, and as a way to rehabilitate my injured leg. After personally experiencing many of the benefits of Pilates including - increased flexibility and strength, improved posture and balance, back/neck pain management, increased core strength, stress management and an overall sense of wellbeing – I was hooked, and decided to share my newfound enthusiasm and passion for Pilates with others by becoming an instructor. I am excited to share my love of Pilates with others, and am dedicated to motivating my clients to improve their bodies and lives through exercise movement and the mind body connection. As Joseph Pilates said, "Physical fitness is the first requisite of happiness."
